memorial for chang kai chek

Republic of China was founded in 1912 on the mainland territory, Taiwan was under Japanese occupation as a result of the Treaty of Shimonoseki in 1895. In the forties when Mao Zedong's communist revolution started against the Kuomintang and after the success of the revolution in control of most of the mainland territory, 1.5 million people moved from the Chinese mainland, accompanied by Chang Kai Chek government to Taiwan ( also called Formosa Island ) 1949. And since that Taiwan was a member in the united nation, Taiwan has a permanent seat on the Security Council until 1971 and then lost it as a result of the Security Council vote to give the permanent seat to People's Republic of China.

Chang Kai Chek died in 1975, and because of him Taiwan became an Asian economic power, and received US aid because he sent military Assistance to Vietnam to support the United State.

The memorial includes photos from various stages of his political career in China and Taiwan later, also personal holdings and his presidential cars.

One of the important locations is the presidential office building in Taipei , which was built during the Japanese occupation - which is open to tourists in some of its parts.

The Taiwanese Kitchen

Through my travels I got to know many friends from China , they advised me to focus of enjoy the food, maybe Taiwanese food is no different from the Chinese cuisine, it is a copy of it, but the difference is the quality of fresh materials and components.

Halal food is available in some restaurants in some places

American fast food restaurants everywhere.

Taichung

One hour far from Taipei you can reach Taichung giant industrial city by fast train, includes (Taiwan Central for Research), and it looks like the Silicon Valley in the United States. It attracts international companies, also attract international and local skills, include one of the most three important industrial groups in the world, of car spare parts companies & products involved in the aircraft industry, and its factories spread in China, Japan, America, Germany and Korea - Taiwanese play link between Japan and China, because they hold the Chinese culture and their education and relationships is strong with Japan.

The city has newly built National Theatre, by a famous Japanese architect,

The city includes various Asian night market, advanced railway network, which covers the entire island, national parks, rice fields, tea growing fields, outstanding mountain trails and valleys, fishing villages, bridges, what are you waiting to visit Taiwan ?!!
