Brief Introduction of Kainan University

Kainan University was formerly known as the Kainan Management College. Kainan Management College was established in 2000 by the alumni of Kainan Commercial & Technical High School in order to realize its alumni's dream of establishing an institution of higher education in Kainan's name.

In 2004, Kainan Management College embarked on an ambitious plan to try and accelerate the speed of its growth and development. As a result, the campus greatly expanded in scope, teaching conditions visibly improved, and the various departments became more integrated. Kainan Management College received a series of awards and achievements and was officially accredited by the Ministry of Education as a comprehensive university. As a result, Kainan Management College changed its name to Kainan University to reflect its status as a comprehensive university. Since then, Kainan University has continued to evolve from a management-oriented college to a comprehensive university. Currently, there are five schools: the School of Informatics, the School of Transportation and Tourism, the School of Humanities and Social Sciences, and the School of Healthcare Management. Kainan also has master's degree programs in numerous academic disciplines.

With academic excellence and integrity as our core values, Kainan University carries on the spirit of honesty, diligence, practicality and creativity in broadening and deepening our students' education. Our goal is to improve our teaching methods, enhance our research competency, and strengthen our student support. As an academic institution, we understand that our students are our products, and we hope that Kainan will become the springboard from which our students can leap and shine on the world's stage.

Introduction Office of International Programs and Services (OIPS)

The OIPS has been established at Kainan since 2005 to help ensure that Kainan students develop in an environment rich in diversity derived from both a diverse faculty and a diverse student body. In today's ever increasingly globalized society, it has become more important for students to develop not only an awareness of cultural difference found around the world, but to go beyond that and also develop the interpersonal and communication skills needed to facilitate the sharing of ideas, values, customs, and cultures across borders. Students must develop both academically and culturally in manners that facilitate the exchange of sometimes differing ideas with minimum conflict. They must also develop an appreciation for the benefits of living in a world where international as well as intercultural relations are commonplace. One of the ways Kainan students learn this is through the university's extensive network of sister schools, which brings students from around the world to Kainan and allows Kainan students to study abroad
