Guidelines for Japanese nationals applying for a visa to join the Republic of China (Taiwan) working holiday scheme

Significance of working holiday schemes

- International youth working holiday schemes help young people explore other cultures and engage in diverse international exchanges, with holiday as the main purpose and work as a secondary one.
- In order to encourage and enhance interaction between youth from Taiwan and other countries, increase mutual understanding, and promote substantive people-to-people exchanges, the R.O.C. (Taiwan) government enters into arrangements on working holiday schemes with foreign governments. These specify application eligibility, quotas, and implementation methods.
- A person may submit an application for the working holiday scheme only twice. The applicant's primary purpose should be to engage in a long-term holiday in Taiwan. If participants need to raise funds for living expenses while in Taiwan, they may work legally, but employment should be considered a secondary rather than a primary purpose. Therefore, this scheme is not suitable for individuals seeking long-term residency, such as for employment or study.
